The United States Government is the largest publisher in the world. It distributes materials in a variety of formats, including electronic, CD, microfiche, and paper. As part of its publishing program, the U.S. Government Publishing Office (GPO) through the Federal Depository Library Program (FDLP) distributes certain classes of government documents free of cost to designated libraries throughout the United States and its territories. These libraries are known as Federal Depository Libraries. All may use these libraries.

The Library of Congress is a Selective Depository and has a rolling 10 years of documents which can be found in our Serial and Government Publications Division, but we also maintain older materials in our General Collections and subscribe to many databases that contain government documents. Below is a list of free and subscription portals to government documents. If you do not live nearby, ask your local library about resources in your area.

The resources provided on this page lead one to U.S. Government documents of all kinds. Some are portals that provide a number of resources and options to explore government documents. Others are databases where one can look for a particular document or

Table No. 10 gives the range of special levies in the counties of the state. No change in levies was yet apparent in 1927-28 by reason of the distribution of the State Equalization Fund that year, since the levies were established before the plan of distributing the fund was known. Beginning with 1928-29 there will be apparent a decided drop in special levies owing to the aid of this fund.
